Researchers pointed out that this effect was isolated to the area of the turbines, that turbines did not negatively affect local weather patterns. The effect was noted to be small compared to effects from man-made global warming.</li> <li>• Regarding electromagnetic</li> </ul>

					fields, all electronic devices, power lines, and generating stations produce EMFs. It is an area of constant research given the proliferation of EMF generation in modern society. Wind turbines are not considered a significant source of EMF exposure. Turbine generators are located in the hub, which tends to be situated 60 to 100 m above ground, resulting in little or no EMF at ground level. Underground cables that connect the turbines effectively generate no EMF at the surface because of the close placement of phase conductors and screening of the cables.
